Prosthetic valve calcification leading to heart failure is one of the most common causes of mortality in long-term hemodialysis patients. However, very-low-dose aspirin may be an effective therapy for preventing prosthetic valve calcification. As part of a project to evaluate the feasibility of a randomized controlled trial comparing very-low-dose aspirin to placebo in nursing home residents, we established the prevalence of hearing loss in nursing home residents and its association with the use of aspirin. Prospective study using chart review. Three nursing home facilities in St. John's, Newfoundland and two in Ottawa and London, Ontario. Two hundred and fifty-seven nursing home residents with no other significant illnesses. None. Prevalence of hearing loss in nursing home residents and its association with the use of aspirin. Of the 257 study participants, 26 (10%) had a priori diagnosed hearing loss. There was a significant association between the risk of hearing loss and the use of aspirin (relative risk (RR) = 2.1, 95% confidence interval (CI): 1.1-3.9). There was no significant association between use of aspirin and hearing loss (RR = 1.0, 95% CI: 0.5-2.0) in persons who had no prior diagnosis of hearing loss. This study indicates that the prevalence of hearing loss in nursing home residents
